12. The President of the Council made concluding remarks.
13. The Secretariat subsequently circulated for information an informal summary of the special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions (E/2001/72). The text read as follows:

“I. Background

“1. The General Assembly, in annex I, paragraph 88 of its resolution 50/227 on revitalizing the United Nations in the economic and social fields, recommended that the Economic and Social Council periodically schedule a high-level special meeting at a time proximate to the semi-annual meetings of the Bretton Woods institutions. The Council subsequently held high-level special meetings with the Bretton Woods institutions in 1998, 1999 and 2000. In response to the 2000 high-level meeting, the General Assembly encouraged the deepening of the dialogue between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions in order to promote the wide range of reforms needed in an international financial architecture that reflects the global interests of the international community. It further recommended that their next high-level meeting should consider the modalities needed to further consolidate a broader global agenda for a strengthened and stable international financial system, responsive to the priorities of growth and development, in particular of developing countries, and to the promotion of economic and social equity in the global economy (see General Assembly resolution 55/186).

“2. The fourth special high-level meeting of the Economic and Social Council with the Bretton Woods institutions was held on 1 May 2001. The meeting addressed two themes: (a) development financing, in particular poverty eradication, official development assistance, and debt; and (b) a development-friendly international financial system: public and private responsibility in the prevention of financial crises. It brought together policy makers in the areas of finance and monetary issues, development cooperation and foreign affairs for a dialogue in the Council.

“3. The high-level meeting of the Council took place in the form of a free-flowing dialogue between ministers and high-level officials, permanent representatives and representatives from the international financial institutions and the United Nations and a panel composed of Gordon Brown, Chairperson of the International Monetary and Financial Committee, Chancellor of the Exchequer of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Northern Ireland; Yashwant Sinha, Chairperson of the Development Committee, Minister of Finance of India; J. O. Sanusi, Chairperson of the Group of 24, Governor of the Central Bank of Nigeria; Paul Martin, Chairperson of the Group of 20, Minister of Finance of Canada; and Andrew Crockett, Chairperson of the Financial Stability Forum, General Manager of the Bank for International Settlements. Sven Sandström, Managing Director of the World Bank, and Eduardo Aninat, Deputy Managing Director of the International Monetary Fund (IMF) made concluding comments.

“4. The meeting was chaired by the President of the Council. The Secretary-General made an opening statement. The Deputy Secretary-General also participated in the meeting. To facilitate an interactive debate, the meeting broke into two simultaneous round tables for part of the meeting.

A note by the Secretary-General on selected aspects of international cooperation in strengthening financing for development (E/2001/45) was used in the discussions.

“5. The present report provides a synopsis of the meeting. It summarizes the salient points and main aspects of the statements made and exchanges of views that took place. It is hoped that the summary will deepen the understanding of the main issues related to financing for development and the reform of the global financial system in the broader context of the commitment to achieving the development goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration and the fight against poverty in developing countries.

“II. Opening statements

“President of the Economic and Social Council

“6. The President of the Economic and Social Council welcomed the participants to the special high-level meeting. The meeting provided a unique forum for key policy makers on financial, monetary, development and foreign affairs to engage in a dialogue with a view to strengthening policy coherence in areas that critically affected the development prospects of all countries and, in particular, those of developing countries.

“7. The President was concerned that the slowdown in the world economy would hamper progress towards the goal of poverty eradication. In addition to major trends in the weakening global economic growth, a number of other factors such as natural disasters, human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) and conflicts had also hindered economic and social recovery. More urgently than ever, common efforts and actions were required to bring the global economy back on a steady path towards the achievement of the Millennium goals and targets.

“8. A stable international financial system was fundamental to effective policies for poverty eradication. Manageable debt and predictable financial flows were also critical ingredients to poverty eradication. Efficient, trusted and reliable mechanisms were essential to ensure that all actors, including the private sector, worked in partnership to create a financial environment conducive to growth and development. A coherent approach to development by the international organizations, in particular the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions, would greatly facilitate the attainment of desired outcomes at all levels.

“9. The discussions of the meeting should help set the stage for the upcoming meeting of the Preparatory Committee of the International Conference on Financing for Development. The United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions had shown exemplary cooperation in preparation for that event. The special high-level meeting of the Council with the Bretton Woods institutions provided an opportunity to engage in an open dialogue on how to mobilize the energy and resources of the entire international system behind the global development agenda defined by Heads of State and Government at the Millennium Summit.

“Secretary-General

“10. The Secretary-General emphasized that since the first meeting between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions the unjustified and unhelpful compartmentalization of their work into separate realms had been consigned to the past. The executive boards of the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund had hosted both the ambassadors of the Council and of the bureau of the Preparatory Committee of the International Conference on Financing for Development in Washington, D.C. The collaboration on his report to the Preparatory Committee had been unprecedented and extremely fruitful. The deepening of partnership and mutual understanding between the Council and the Bretton Woods institutions boded well for the multilateral system and its constituents.

“11. The current slowdown in world economic growth, which had originated in the developed world, could have significant risks for the developing countries, as adverse developments in major economies propagate themselves through the multiple channels of the globalized world economy. But wherever and however such problems arose, one result was always the same: the poor suffered disproportionately. The needs and aspirations of the poor thus needed to be kept at the top of the agenda to ensure that they were not victimized, left behind or without help, particularly in the developing countries.

“12. Unless far greater amounts of resources were mobilized from both public and market-led investment, plans to eradicate poverty and to accelerate development would be thwarted. The donor countries, which received most of the benefits from globalization, should increase their aid and help to increase its effectiveness. At the same time, greater attention needed to be paid and focused on making better use of domestic resources, where women in particular needed more access to capital.

“13. In his report to the Preparatory Committee for the International Conference on Financing for Development, he had recommended wide-ranging action aimed at strengthening of financial institutions, legal frameworks, governance, measures against corruption, debt relief, improved market access and reduced vulnerability of developing countries and countries with economies in transition to sudden reversals of resource flows.

“14. Furthermore, to make globalization work for all and to defuse some of the backlash against globalization, it was crucial that developing countries be given an adequate voice in the decisions affecting their development prospects, particularly in the governing bodies of the international financial institutions. These bodies needed to be made more effective, accountable and transparent.

“15. While these issues were complex and closely intertwined, the Secretary-General urged participants not to renegotiate, rehash or revisit old issues. A consensus on the values, priorities and objectives that should guide the Member States already existed in the Millennium Declaration. The Secretariat would continue to assist Member States in their efforts to achieve the Millennium goals and would be active in monitoring progress at both global and national levels, in close consultation with Governments and civil society. The Council and the Bretton Woods institutions could do their rightful part and take their cooperation to a new level.

“Chairperson of the International Monetary and Financial Committee

“16. The Chairperson of the International Monetary and Financial Committee underlined that the message he brought from the meeting of his Committee was the shared recognition by all countries of their mutual interdependence, which meant that economic instability anywhere had repercussions everywhere. In the face of a slowing economy, international economic cooperation had to be strengthened in order to achieve economic and social progress. There was a need to be vigilant and forward looking in creating the conditions needed for macroeconomic growth, to continue the reform of the international financial architecture, to open trade talks this year and to build a virtuous circle of debt relief and economic growth and development to achieve the goals for poverty reduction by 2015.

“17. To achieve the target of reducing the proportion of people living in poverty in half by 2015, lasting debt relief was needed for the poorest countries. The heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC) debt initiative, which had now been implemented in 22 countries, had to achieve its goal of a lasting exit from debt and poverty. A special programme for post-conflict countries was being considered.

“18. The development and adoption of codes and standards and their application in practice by rich and poor countries was important for crisis prevention. Surveillance should be encouraged to minimize the contagion effect. The private sector had the duty to be engaged and to invest even in difficult times.

“19. Education for all was the best long-term poverty eradication strategy. The International Monetary Financial Committee, for the first time, stressed the importance of the commitments made at the World Education Forum, held in Dakar from 26 to 28 April 2000, and in particular, those on education for girls and women.

“20. On health issues, in particular HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases such as malaria and tuberculosis, the International Monetary Financial Committee followed the lead of the Secretary-General of the United Nations and the President of the World Bank and, also for the first time, determined that action was needed on a priority basis. A window of opportunity existed this year for concrete initiatives as well as an alliance among Governments, international organizations and the private sector to take specific steps. There was growing support for the establishment of a Global Health Fund, which would enable development of new vaccines, access to drugs and vaccination and better support and delivery systems. Pharmaceutical companies should continue research and development and make drugs available at affordable prices in the poorest countries.

“21. These programmes of reform in health and education made it clear that economic progress could not be bought at the expense of social progress. The task of providing relief from poverty was a duty of all.

“Chairperson of the Development Committee

“22. The Chairperson of the Development Committee noted with satisfaction that globalization was finally catching up with global institutions, as demonstrated by the present meeting. He noted with concern that the slowdown of the world economy would have uneven impact and different consequences for rich and poor countries, meaning less prosperity in the developed countries but more poverty in the developing countries. In its own meeting, as well as in the joint meeting with the International Monetary and Financial Committee, special note had been taken of the problems of the poorest countries, especially of those in Africa. The joint meeting had resolved to further intensify efforts to implement the HIPC debt initiative, debt relief and the continuation of overseas development assistance.

“23. Trade needed to be leveraged for development so that countries receiving debt relief would not fall back into the debt trap. In this regard, international institutions should provide assistance in capacity-building so that these countries could take advantage of global trade opportunities. The World Bank could help in enhancing the negotiating capacities of the developing countries.

“24. The World Bank should apply a selective and strategic approach towards middle-income countries. It should be a catalyst for policy and institutional change, including capacity-building, for increased private investment flow and financial support in promoting sustainable growth and poverty reduction in these countries. The Development Committee expressed support for the initiative to control communicable diseases and identified it as a major public good, along with trade integration, financial stability, knowledge and environmental commons. Other issues discussed by the Development Committee were external vulnerabilities and contagion and their destabilizing effect on the financial sector.

“25. The Chairperson elaborated on the six-point action plan which he, in his capacity as Minister of Finance of India, had suggested to the Development Committee, and which included many of the concerns he had just mentioned. The six points were: concentration on capacity-building in low-income and least developed countries; provision of fair and equal opportunities to middle-income countries; protection against external vulnerabilities and contagion effects; war against communicable diseases; sustainable development, addressing economic growth, social justice and environmental protection; and effective governance at national and subnational levels.

“Chairperson of the Group of 24

“26. The Chairperson of the Group of 24 stressed that the global economic slowdown would have a special impact on developing countries by negatively affecting primary commodity prices and by weakening adjustment efforts and growth. To achieve the target contained in the Millennium Declaration of reducing the proportion of people living in poverty by half by 2015, adequate funding would be required, but developing countries faced complex obstacles in mobilizing resources. Concerted global action was necessary. The integration of financial markets would not necessarily translate into global economic growth and social equity. The Group of 24 urged the donors to bridge the resource shortfall from private flows by increasing official development assistance contributions from the 0.24 per cent in 1999 to the target of 0.7 per cent of gross national product (GNP). International and regional financial institutions should increase direct lending and leveraging private resource flows to middle-income countries. The Group also called for adequate funding for the thirteenth replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association.

“27. The Group of 24 had welcomed the progress made under the enhanced HIPC debt initiative and through the poverty reduction strategy papers. However, as only one country had reached completion point, faster implementation and quicker access to resources were required. Technical assistance and simple, realistic and focused conditionality should enable more countries to complete the poverty reduction strategy papers so as to reach completion point and qualify for debt relief as soon as possible. Special attention was required to address the needs of countries in conflict.

“28. Many developing countries had incorporated trade policy reform as part of their economic policy. However, trade protectionism remained entrenched within the policies of developed countries, hindering opportunities for developing countries to increase trade. Trade barriers, especially for agricultural products and textiles, needed to be removed and market access improved to allow the developing countries to benefit from global trade. Progress had been made to strengthen the international financial system through the establishment of codes and standards. Their observance, however, had to remain voluntary, duly recognizing the country-specific circumstances and stages of development.

“29. The Group of 24 appreciated the increased global awareness and expanded efforts to fight HIV/AIDS and stated that a global trust fund to combat the disease should be immediately established. The World Bank should strengthen its partnership with the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS and other important actors, especially in their efforts to develop a vaccine.

“30. The Chairperson expected that the deliberations of the special high-level meeting would serve as a valuable contribution to the financing for development process.

“Chairperson of the Group of 20

“31. The Chairperson of the Group of 20 recalled that the Group’s key concerns were financial issues and reform efforts in the international financial system. Composed of the Ministers of Finance of 19 countries, it had been formed in the aftermath of the Asian financial crisis. The Group represented 88 per cent of world output, 65 per cent of the world's population and 60 per cent of the world's poor.

"32. While having access to capital was important, massive capital fluctuations could destabilize the economy and create crises. The Group was promoting consistency in financial management, but recognized that the credo of some could not be imposed on all. Countries had to be part of the decision-making process in order to be part of the solution.

"33. In discussing some of the achievements of the Group, he highlighted the acceptance of standards and codes, as well as their implementation, which contributed to transparency in financial statements. Having recognized that countries were different, the Group was preparing case studies to help formulate policies that enabled countries to adjust to the realities of globalization.

"34. As another accomplishment of the Group of 20, the Chairperson stressed the need to go far beyond the 'Washington consensus', which was considered too narrow. Economic growth was an essential prerequisite, but economic growth without social equity was not sustainable and would not lead to poverty eradication. The 'Montreal consensus', which emanated from the second meeting of the Group of 20 on 24 and 25 October 2000, affirmed that the social safety of all people served as a basis for economic security.

"Chairperson of the Financial Stability Forum

"35. The Chairperson pointed out that the work of the Financial Stability Forum had shown that international financial crises originated in weak domestic financial systems. As finance had become more global, contagion effects had brought unforeseeable, unexpected consequences. The Forum brought together national and international authorities responsible for financial regulation and supervision, including ministries of finance, central banks, regulatory authorities, the World Bank, the International Monetary Fund and international standard setting bodies. Discussions centred on the financial architecture, the development of standards and codes and good practice aimed at making countries more resilient to crises.

"36. The task of the Financial Stability Forum was to improve the capacity for sharing information, and to identify weaknesses in national systems that could pose a threat in the future. Among the examples of the Forum's work were efforts to improve transparency in the operations of highly leveraged institutions, such as the hedge funds, and efforts aimed at increasing resilience to instability caused by volatile short-term capital flows.

"37. One cornerstone in the efforts to build a new financial architecture was the development and implementation of codes and standards. While the principles underpinning the codes and standards were universal, implementation should be carried out according to the needs and circumstances of each individual country. This required prioritization, incentives such as technical assistance and monitoring.

"38. With regard to representativeness of participation, it was vital that countries felt ownership, requiring the involvement of all those interested in the issues. Consultation mechanisms had to be further developed so that all voices could be heard. Regional forums could play an important role in this regard.

"III. Round-table discussions

"39. After the introductory statements, the meeting reconvened in two round tables for an interactive dialogue among participants. Each group was invited to address both themes chosen for the high-level meeting. Ministers of finance and of development cooperation, governors of central banks, permanent representatives, panellists, and representatives of the international financial institutions, the United Nations, the United Nations Development Programme and the Economic Commission for Latin America and the Caribbean took the floor. They focused on the set of issues and questions raised in the note by the Secretary-General (E/2001/45), and in the introductory statements made in plenary. The round tables were chaired, respectively, by the President and Senior Vice-President of the Council. The following main themes emerged from the round-table discussions.

“A. Global economic outlook and achievement of goals of the Millennium Summit

“40. Participants expressed concern about the generalized slowdown in the global economy and its impact on the achievement of development and poverty eradication goals. Fear was expressed at sinking commodity prices and increased protectionist pressures in developed countries. Speakers stressed the crucial need to ensure sustained economic growth as a prerequisite for poverty eradication. This required pro-poor growth policies in developing countries, combined with increased aid, more soft loans, open market access and reduction of subsidies, especially in agriculture, in the developed countries. There was also a need for a better balance between fiscal discipline and social needs in pursuing growth and poverty reduction strategies.

“41. Speakers underlined the need for a firm commitment to achieving the goals of the Millennium Summit as endorsed by Heads of State and Government in September 2000, and in particular the long-term objective of poverty eradication. The latter was also a key objective of the upcoming Third United Nations Conference on Least Developed Countries (14-20 May 2001, Brussels), which should see an upsurge in international solidarity. The same solidarity was essential to support the development of efforts in Africa.

“42. Milestones such as the Millennium Declaration and the global conferences of the 1990s had created more support for development goals than ever before. The International Conference on Financing for Development provided the opportunity for translating the consensus on these goals into practical action. To that end, the gap between the views of ministries of finance and of development regarding the time frame of goals, public spending and performance parameters needed to be bridged. The fact that the consensus on development goals was now finally being carried into the work of the international financial institutions was commended. Several speakers supported the Secretary-General's proposal for a practical, action-oriented 'Millennium campaign' in order to meet the Millennium goals.

“B. Poverty eradication: the role of official development assistance, debt relief and trade

“43. While recognizing the indispensability of economic growth to alleviate poverty, speakers underlined the critical contribution of official development assistance, debt relief and trade to development and poverty eradication not only in the poorest, but also in middle-income countries and countries with economies in transition.

“44. Noting the long-standing international target of 0.7 per cent of GNP for official development assistance, many speakers voiced their disappointment at the low and sinking levels of contributions to official development assistance, which had seen a further net reduction for 2000. At the same time, the increase in official development assistance in real terms by a number of countries in 2000 was acknowledged and the five countries that had reached or exceeded the 0.7 per cent target were commended. For countries with special difficulties, official development assistance should be provided either as grants or as loans on very soft terms. Development challenges such as education and HIV/AIDS required additional resources, especially in the context of a weakening global economy. Several speakers from developed countries urged other donors to increase their financial contributions to development.

“45. Several speakers welcomed the enhanced HIPC debt initiative, but also expressed concern that, so far, only one country had reached the completion point. Agreeing that more needed to be done, speakers called for flexibility in the application of the initiative. Priority should be given to the full funding of the HIPC debt initiative rather than to its expansion at this time. It was feared that an expansion might divert resources from other purposes, such as the thirteenth replenishment of the resources of the International Development Association. International financial institutions were urged to include additional factors in debt sustainability analysis. Noting that debt relief could only be an exceptional measure, some urged caution in efforts to reach comprehensive debt solutions.

“46. Several speakers considered that increased trade and market access was the single most important element for developing countries to achieve sustainable growth and to escape poverty. This required the reduction of trade barriers, especially for agricultural products and textiles. The European Union was commended for its ‘Everything but arms’ initiative.

“47. Emphasis was also placed on the situation of middle-income countries, in which 80 per cent of the world’s poor lived. Development assistance, trade and financial issues, such as increased liquidity, improved cash flow, crisis prevention and avoiding contagion, also required consideration from the perspective of middle-income countries.

“C. Sustainability of growth

“48. A number of speakers emphasized the importance of the sustainability of economic growth for poverty eradication. Ensuring the transition to development through coherent financial and trade policies was particularly important for highly indebted poor countries once they had reached completion point of the HIPC debt initiative. However, efforts needed to go beyond the ‘Washington consensus’. National efforts, including pro-poor macroeconomic policies, good governance, increased accountability and anti-corruption measures needed to go hand in hand with international financial support and coherent donor policies. Emphasis was placed on national institution and capacity-building for sustainable growth. The mobilization of domestic social capital would contribute to accelerated development and also ensure ownership of the development process. The role of international institutions in providing technical assistance was underlined.

“49. Similarly, many speakers emphasized the crucial role of social policies, especially in the fields of education and health, for sustainable economic growth. Speakers were encouraged by concrete action in these areas, such as the increasing support for the proposed Global Health Fund aimed at fighting HIV/AIDS and other infectious diseases such as malaria and tuberculosis.

“D. Strengthening the international financial system

“50. Several speakers noted that further progress in strengthening the international financial system was necessary to promote the sustainable development of all countries and to achieve the goals outlined in the Millennium Declaration. Reducing the system’s instability, with special reference to contagion and the speculative activities and limited transparency of hedge funds, was also a precondition for developing countries to benefit from globalization. Indeed, some participants emphasized the value of international financial stability as a global public good.

“51. Many speakers underlined the importance of global standards and codes and the need of recognizing in their implementation the country-specific circumstances and stages of development, including institutional and administrative constraints. The necessary time period required to adapt the standards and codes to each country should also be taken into account. Significantly more technical assistance and additional resources were essential to strengthen the implementation capacities of developing countries in this area.

“52. In addition to the need to improve crisis prevention and management capabilities, including by strengthening domestic financial systems, several participants emphasized that the costs of crisis resolution should be distributed more equally, among creditors and debtors and private and public sectors. To this end, some speakers put forward the proposal of establishing debtor/creditor councils that would facilitate the achievement of cooperative solutions.

“E. Participation

“53. Regarding the ongoing reforms of the Bretton Woods institutions, several ministers welcomed the review of IMF conditionality initiated by its Managing Director, with a view to making it better focused, more effective and less intrusive, as well as to enhancing programme ownership. Nevertheless, developing countries still needed a larger voice in the decision-making processes of these institutions. More generally, there was broad convergence on the need for inclusion and participation of all countries and stakeholders in global policy-making as a prerequisite to ensure its success. In this regard, most speakers noted with satisfaction the growing cooperation between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions in the dialogue on global governance.

“F. Financing for development

“54. There was general agreement that the upcoming International Conference on Financing for Development represented a critical milestone in the dialogue between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions. The Conference provided a unique opportunity for concrete advances on the above issues under a new framework that bridged existing gaps in different policy-making cultures. The main objective of the event should be a global alliance for development, ensuring better governance of globalization for the benefit of all.

“55. The preparatory process of the Conference had engaged in an unprecedented way all relevant stakeholders, including Governments, multilateral institutions, the private sector and civil society, to discuss, using a holistic approach, all the key financial issues related to the promotion of development. The full engagement of the Bretton Woods institutions and the World Trade Organization in the preparatory process and their commitment to actively participate in the Conference itself boded well for its success. Several participants called for similar commitments by finance, economy and trade ministries of Member States.

“IV. Concluding remarks

“56. Following the conclusion of the two round-table discussions, the President and Senior Vice-President summarized in plenary the salient points that had emerged in their respective groups. Both emphasized the value of the new format and the lively and productive discussion that had ensued with the participation of a large number of speakers contributing the perspectives of countries from all regions.

“57. After the reports from the two round tables, the President of the Council invited the Deputy Managing Director of IMF and the Managing Director of the World Bank to make concluding comments on the discussions.

“58. The Deputy Managing Director of IMF found that the vision, balance and the acknowledgement of the need for coherence that resonated in the meeting sent powerful signals to the world community. Governments, civil society, the private sector and the United Nations system were working together to make globalization work for all. A balance needed to be struck between the multiple goals and priorities on the one hand and the insufficient resources and limited instruments available on the other. The Bretton Woods institutions were making efforts to that end, but greater coherence and accountability were needed in moving forward.

“59. The IMF reform efforts placed an emphasis on: realigning the conditionality review process to make it more efficient and open; adapting the Fund’s facilities to make them more conducive to pressing needs; and strengthening the Fund’s role in surveillance and assessment of external vulnerability. The Fund assisted capacity-building through technical assistance in macroeconomic policy and other emerging issues. It assisted countries in several areas such as liquidity positions, foreign exchange management, debt management and early warning.

“60. In conclusion, he noted that the Fund was a learning institution and that it would continue to change while maintaining its expertise and competencies in core macroeconomic issues. The Fund was pleased to work with the World Bank on the HIPC debt initiative and reiterated its commitment to actively engage in the financing for development process.

“61. The Managing Director of the World Bank reconfirmed the World Bank’s commitment to work together in the preparatory process of the International Conference on Financing for Development and at the event itself. The Bank was pleased with the broad agenda, which looked at the full set of resources for development, both public and private, as well as other economic activities such as trade. While he saw a good alignment of the United Nations, the World Bank and IMF, the Bank would like to see a much stronger involvement from the part of national Governments and a range of their ministries in the planning process for the International Conference on Financing for Development.

“62. The Managing Director highlighted key constraints to development and the Bank’s efforts in addressing them. The HIPC debt initiative, combined with traditional debt relief and bilateral debt forgiveness, would provide $55 billion in debt relief for 22 countries, a reduction of their debt burden by almost two thirds. As a result, an increase in social sector expenditure had already been seen by 25 per cent. The Bank was also taking action in other areas which posed constraints to development such as post-conflict reconstruction and HIV/AIDS. The fight against HIV/AIDS was expected to receive $500 million per year with the possibility to be expanded to $1 billion per year in the future. To take advantage of trade as a lever for development, market access needed to be improved and the capacity of developing countries to participate in trade negotiations strengthened.

“63. The Managing Director noted a move beyond a discussion of the financial architecture towards a global ‘development architecture’, which included country ownership, long-term debt strategies, international development goals and increased alliances reaching beyond the United Nations system. In this regard, the Bank addressed individual constraints and also focused on the overall orientation of development.

“64. In his closing remarks, the President of the Council characterized the discussions as having been of outstanding quality and depth. They had shown that financial and monetary issues and the integration of developing and transition economies into the global economy remained crucial questions to be addressed for economic growth and development. This was one of the major challenges to be dealt with in the process leading up to the International Conference on Financing for Development. Increased official development assistance, together with sound national policies and unhindered market access also remained critical issues in the development debate. The meeting reinforced the urgency of the global community’s efforts for poverty eradication, especially in the aftermath of the Millennium

Summit, which set very precise time-bound targets for achieving development goals. All Governments and international institutions, including the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, which had participated in the high-level meeting were expected to assume their share of responsibility for concrete action to implement these commitments.

“65. The President noted that responsibility for development was incumbent upon a larger number of stakeholders, beyond Governments and international institutions, as was emphasized in the discussion on the role of the private sector in situations of financial crises, especially in their prevention. The potentially devastating contagion effect of such crises made it imperative to seek new and creative ways of interaction, of sharing responsibility as well as for broadening participation between the public and the private sector. International institutions might be increasingly called upon to provide a forum where all stakeholders could meet and develop such creative new interaction in an effort of shared responsibility. At the same time, it was clear that the strength of the financial institutions, especially IMF and the World Bank, remained essential for global economic and financial stability.

“66. In conclusion, the President commented that globalization brought with it old and new discontents, challenges and opportunities. At the Millennium Summit, it had been agreed that globalization had to become a positive force for all. He expressed his hope that the Economic and Social Council would maintain and expand its role of providing the unrivalled platform for dialogue between the United Nations and the Bretton Woods institutions, where innovative ideas emerged and opportunities for promoting and deepening the understanding between the two sets of institutions were created. The goodwill and positive spirit of the high-level meeting constituted a good start for the resumption of the preparations for the International Conference on Financing for Development.”

The President of the Council made a concluding statement. The text of the declaration read as follows:

Ministerial declaration of the high-level segment submitted by the President of the Council

The role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development

"1. We, the Ministers and Heads of Delegations participating in the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Economic and Social Council, held from 16 to 18 July 2001, having considered the theme "The role of the United Nations in support of the efforts of African countries to achieve sustainable development", have adopted the following declaration.

"2. We note with appreciation the priority accorded to the region in various United Nations initiatives and conferences in recent years and the emphasis placed on meeting the special needs of the continent in the United Nations Millennium Declaration.² In this context, we recall that we will support the consolidation of democracy in Africa and assist Africans in their struggle for lasting peace, poverty eradication and sustainable development, thereby bringing Africa into the mainstream of the world economy. We resolve therefore:

(a) To give full support to the political and institutional structures of emerging democracies in Africa;

(b) To encourage and sustain regional and subregional mechanisms for preventing conflict and promoting political stability, and to ensure a reliable flow of resources for peacekeeping operations on the continent;

(c) To take special measures to address the challenges of poverty eradication and sustainable development in Africa, including debt cancellation, improved market access, enhanced official development assistance and increased flows of foreign direct investment, as well as transfer of technology;

(d) To help Africa build up its capacity to tackle the spread of the human immunodeficiency virus/acquired immunodeficiency syndrome (HIV/AIDS) pandemic and other infectious diseases.

“3. We call on the General Assembly to improve the process of assessing and monitoring progress in the implementation of the commitments on Africa made in the Millennium Declaration, as well as major United Nations conferences and summits, and we request the Council to play its full part in this process.

“4. We recognize the efforts of African countries to promote sustainable development through the implementation of economic and political reforms in the past two decades and note with appreciation the support of the United Nations system for these efforts. However, in spite of these combined efforts, African countries still face multifaceted sustainable development challenges. We also recognize the need to promote the role of women in social and economic development, including by assuring their participation in the political and economic life of African countries. We further recognize the need for an increased focus on the rights and well-being of children, in particular their health and education.

“5. We welcome the leadership efforts of African leaders to develop an African-owned and African-led framework for action towards the sustainable development of the African continent, and call on the United Nations system and the international community to support the New African Initiative recently adopted by the Organization of African Unity (OAU) at its thirty-seventh summit, held in Lusaka in July 2001. In this regard, we invite the Secretary-General to take the requisite measures to ensure an effective and coordinated response of the United Nations system to the Initiative. We acknowledge the call made by the African heads of State for a special session of the General Assembly to consider how best to support the Initiative.

“6. We are convinced that the United Nations system is uniquely placed to play a key role in supporting Africa’s efforts and to help create a momentum for a productive and mutually beneficial partnership between Africa and the international community and civil society, including the private sector. In this connection, we recognize the important role played by the United Nations through its development activities in Africa. We note that while United Nations organizations have undertaken many activities in the field, particularly in the area of poverty eradication, results have not always matched expectations.

“7. In order for the United Nations system to effectively support Africa’s efforts towards achieving sustainable development, we consider the following to be crucial.

“Integrating peace and development

“8. We recognize the critical links between peace, democracy, national efforts towards the promotion of good governance, respect for all internationally recognized human rights and fundamental freedoms, including the right to development, and sustainable development in Africa. In this regard, we believe that economic growth supportive of poverty eradication and development should be at the core of conflict-prevention strategies. There should be a coordinated and comprehensive approach by all partners in order to support such economic growth, reconstruction and recovery, peace-building, national efforts in promoting good governance and strengthening the rule of law. To ensure that these links are operationalized, we call on the United Nations to do the following:

(a) Mobilize political support and resources for implementing the various United Nations poverty eradication initiatives and programmes for Africa through strengthened partnerships with African Governments, bilateral donors, the Bretton Woods institutions and civil society organizations, including the private sector;

(b) Strengthen the capacity of African Governments to make the linkages between the economic and social dimensions of poverty-reduction strategies, and assist in monitoring and analysis before and after such strategies are produced;

(c) Support African countries in promoting economic and social policies that are pro-poor and gender-sensitive, including employment and income-generating opportunities for poor people, women and youth through microfinance, community-based development and decentralization, enterprise development, food security plans, adequate nutrition and land tenure. In this connection, strengthen the “Jobs for Africa” programme;

(d) Combine peace-building, emergency assistance and longer-term development support measures in a comprehensive and coherent response in special development situations, paying particular attention to the social reintegration of displaced persons, refugees returning to their countries of origin and ex-combatants, the destruction of weapons, including anti-personnel mines, the control of small arms and light weapons, community reconciliation, strengthening and rebuilding of democratic and other institutions, environmental regeneration and protection, and reconstruction of economic, social and physical infrastructure, ensuring that the development dimension is taken into account both at the headquarters and in the field;

(e) Explore the feasibility of creating a subregional United Nations coordinating capability, possibly by using existing United Nations regional offices, which would assist the United Nations system in setting integrated policies and strategies, ensure the harmonization of activities and lend support to national and subregional peace-building efforts and initiatives, while supporting subregional integration, and to that end to request the Secretary-General to report to the Council on the most cost-efficient and effective avenue for the creation of such capability.

“9. Recognizing that the primary responsibility for successful peace-building and conflict prevention rests with Governments and is predicated on an effective cooperation between the concerned national Governments and all international partners, including the United Nations system, the international financial institutions, regional and subregional organizations, NGOs, bilateral donors, other countries and, where appropriate, the private sector, we call on all partners to take an active part in the efforts to ensure that targeted interventions are coordinated and sequenced in such a way as to enhance their impact at the country and subregional levels.

“10. We recall that the General Assembly, in its resolution 55/217, requested the Council to consider the creation of an ad hoc advisory group on countries emerging from conflict with a view to assessing their humanitarian and economic needs and elaborating a long-term programme of support for implementation that begins with the integration of relief into development. In this context, we request the Secretary-General to seek the views of member States and to present a report with proposals on the mandate, composition and modalities of work of such an advisory group, taking into account those views, for the consideration of the Council within the first quarter of 2002.

“Development of human capital

“11. We are also deeply concerned that Africa’s efforts to reverse its low human capital development are being severely challenged by a worsening health crisis, including HIV/AIDS, malaria, tuberculosis and other infectious diseases. We welcome the Abuja Declaration on HIV/AIDS, Tuberculosis and Other Related Infectious Diseases, and the outcome of the special session of the General Assembly on HIV/AIDS, and call for their implementation in order to support Africa’s efforts in this area, including the need for generous contributions to the fight against HIV/AIDS and other communicable diseases, including through a global HIV/AIDS and health fund.

“12. Given the multisectoral impact of HIV/AIDS, we call on all funds, programmes and agencies which have not yet done so to mainstream AIDS prevention into their activities, paying particular attention to building national capacity to develop and implement comprehensive national strategies for HIV/AIDS prevention, care, support and treatment. We also urge the relevant organizations to assist in building national and regional capacity to tackle malaria, tuberculosis and other major diseases afflicting the region. We take note of the work of

United Nations agencies, in particular the World Health Organization and the International Atomic Energy Agency, in addressing drug-resistant malaria, and also encourage the stakeholders of the Roll Back Malaria Campaign to replicate their success stories. We also welcome the Global Alliance for Vaccines and Immunizations, ongoing governmental programmes and other public-private partnerships in the health sector.

“13. We assign high importance to achieving universal primary education, eliminating gender disparities in primary and secondary education by 2005 and achieving gender equality in education by 2015, with a focus on ensuring girls’ full and equal access to and achievement of a basic education of good quality through such initiatives as the United Nations girls’ education initiative. We are convinced that new and innovative measures should be undertaken to enable African countries to meet the international development goals in education and at the same time develop the skills required by the new knowledge-based global economy. We therefore encourage the following:

(a) The replication in low-enrolment countries in Africa of successful United Nations programmes designed to ensure the attendance and retention of children in school, in particular girls, such as the World Food Programme “Food for thought” programme;

(b) Implementation of the Dakar Framework for Action on Education for All and enhanced assistance to African countries in implementing and integrating Education for All into their national development and poverty eradication strategies, including, where appropriate, in sector-wide programmes and their poverty reduction strategy papers;

(c) Expansion of subregional capacity training programmes and advocacy for regional specialization of academic training in order to maximize synergies and resources;

(d) Concerted efforts to facilitate rapid and cost-effective development of human capital through increased, innovative and effective use of information and communication technologies in training, institutional capacity-building and

education, including distance learning, technical, vocational and tertiary education;

(e) Assistance to African countries to undertake an audit of human capital development capacity needs and to devise strategies for addressing them in order to achieve the international development goals, including evaluation of efforts so far made to build such capacity in Africa.

“14. We also encourage all partners to support United Nations-assisted and other relevant networks and centres of excellence, and urge them to provide incentives to private enterprise to facilitate the transfer of technology to African countries and to assist with the development of their science and technology capacity.

“Environment and development

“15. We recognize the importance of the integration of environmental concerns into policies designed to support economic and social development, and emphasize the role that sustainable use and management of resources can play in achieving sustainable development. We also recognize the importance of addressing in an interrelated and mutually supportive manner the three dimensions of sustainable development.

“Agriculture and food security

“16. We recognize the critical links between agriculture, increased food production, access to food, agricultural diversification and rural development, and enhancing food security. In this regard, we strongly call for:

(a) Strengthened measures by and enhanced assistance to the African countries in their fight against land degradation, drought and desertification, and by multilateral and bilateral donors and through public and private partnerships;

(b) Accelerated implementation of all water-related operational activities of the United Nations system related to increasing access to safe water for household and agricultural use;

(c) The support for and replication of success stories being coordinated and implemented by the United Nations system, including support for research on drought-resistant staple crops, such as the “New rice for Africa” project and the control of the tsetse fly;

(d) Advocacy by the United Nations system for trade rules that promote food security, including through fair market access for agricultural products, and the implementation of the Marrakech Decision on Measures Concerning the Possible Negative Effects of the Reform Programme on Least Developed and Net Food-Importing Developing Countries;³

(e) Due priority in domestic and external resource mobilization for agricultural and rural development, including the provision of infrastructure and the inclusion of food, agriculture and rural development in the poverty reduction strategy paper process, where appropriate;

(f) Promotion of measures to increase food production and access to food, land, credit and technology;

(g) Support the efforts of Governments to review, as appropriate, their ongoing national food security policies with a view to filling gaps, identifying and removing obstacles and taking adequate measures;

(h) Reaffirm the goal to halve the number of those suffering from hunger by 2015, and include the goal as part of poverty eradication programmes and relevant initiatives for Africa.

“Diversification of African economies

“17. We recognize the role that increased diversification and competitiveness of economies can play in promoting sustained economic growth and sustainable development and poverty eradication in African countries. Consequently, we call for:

(a) Support for the development of enterprises in the manufacturing, services and other sectors, including small and medium-sized enterprises, in order to increase the value of production and trade, including processing of primary commodities of the region, and moving into higher value-added resource-based industries;

(b) Further support for the implementation of Africa’s industrialization strategies, particularly the Alliance for Africa’s Industrialization;

(c) Promotion of effective linkages between manufacturing industries and agriculture in order to properly use agro-industrial opportunities for development;

(d) Further actions to address high transaction costs.

“Mobilization of resources for development

“18. We are gravely concerned that if current trends continue the majority of African countries will be unable to achieve the international development goals, including those reaffirmed by the Millennium Declaration. In this context, the urgent mobilization of domestic and external resources is required if African countries are to reverse the rising tide of poverty. The United Nations system should therefore:

(a) Upon request, provide policy advice on appropriate domestic strategies to mobilize domestic resources and attract foreign investment, for example in the areas of improved revenue collection, improved intermediation of savings and investment, measures for encouraging the return of flight capital while providing technical assistance to strengthen key institutions, assisting in building capacity to attract and service domestic and foreign investors, and improving public financial management and fighting corruption in the public and private sectors;

(b) Strengthen the capacity of African countries to monitor and manage their debt;

(c) Assist African Governments, upon request, in expanding the formal sector of the economy in order to, inter alia, increase economic growth and broaden the tax base;

(d) Develop joint programmes for assisting African countries in the formulation and implementation of national and subregional diversification strategies that would lead to the expansion of trade and increased export earnings;

(e) Support the efforts of African countries to overcome supply-side constraints, and in this regard contribute to strengthening trade-related technical assistance to enhance their participation in the multilateral trading system, paying particular attention to helping African countries to reach internationally agreed technical standards through, inter alia, the implementation of the Integrated Framework for Trade-related Technical Assistance for Least Developed Countries. Help African countries to build capacities in order to participate effectively in any multilateral trade negotiations and in order to address the implementation concerns of developing countries;

(f) Expand its network of partnerships with the private sector and foundations so as to secure additional sources of funding for poverty eradication programmes. In this regard, we assert that these additional funds are complementary to and not a substitute for official development assistance (ODA);

(g) Assist African countries, where appropriate, in enhancing their absorptive capacity for international development assistance, including ODA.

“19. We recognize that the support of the international community, especially the donor community, is necessary to maximize the impact of the actions of the United Nations system to increase resources for development. We also recognize that, despite the positive effects that an enabling environment with good governance, sound macroeconomic policies and efficient management of public revenue and expenditure, can achieve in terms of mobilization of local resources, external finance, in particular ODA, will remain, for African countries, a critical resource for achieving the international development goals. Consequently, we call for:

(a) Strengthened efforts by developed countries to meet as soon as possible the ODA targets of 0.7 per cent of their gross national product (GNP) and the targets of earmarking 0.15 per cent to 0.20 per cent of GNP for the least developed countries, as agreed, and to grant more generous development assistance, including voluntary contributions to core resources of United Nations funds, programmes and specialized agencies, to African countries for their sustainable development, in particular poverty eradication programmes;

(b) The effective and improved coordination of the delivery of ODA by all development partners;

(c) The implementation of the Organisation for Economic Cooperation and Development/Development Assistance Committee recommendation on the untying of aid to least developed countries;

(d) The full, speedy and effective implementation of the enhanced heavily indebted poor countries (HIPC) initiative for eligible African countries through new and additional resources, as needed, and the adoption by eligible countries of the policy measures required to join the initiative, while stressing the importance of continued flexibility with regard to the eligibility criteria for the enhanced HIPC initiative, in particular for countries in post-conflict situations;

(e) Advance the development dimension of international trade and accelerate the beneficial integration of African countries into the global economy, including by improving and ensuring preferential and effective market access, and by encouraging action that would enhance the diversification of African economies with the goal of increasing the predictability of earnings, greater economic security, poverty eradication and greater domestic savings;

(f) Particular attention to the special needs of Africa in the International Conference on Financing for Development, in the context of assisting the region in meeting the international development goals.

“Harmonization and coordination of development assistance to Africa

“20. We welcome the recent emphasis in the development community on the need to work collaboratively to enhance the impact of development assistance, especially as regards those activities geared towards poverty eradication. The United Nations can play an important role in fostering harmonization and coordination of bilateral and multilateral development cooperation activities in support of national plans and programmes. In order to more effectively play this role, the Secretary-General should ensure that all the programmes and activities of the United Nations are coordinated with a view to reducing the transaction costs of its operational activities in Africa. The United Nations can do so by further strengthening coordination through:

(a) Strengthening the resident coordinator system, accelerating and harmonization of programming cycles, and aligning and simplifying the rules and procedures used by the various funds, programmes and specialized agencies;

(b) Encouraging the use of joint programmes, where appropriate, by the United Nations organizations, as has been effectively demonstrated by the Joint United Nations Programme on HIV/AIDS at the global and field levels;

(c) Strengthening complementarity between coordination frameworks, such as the common country assessment, the United Nations Development Assistance Framework and the poverty reduction strategy paper, where they exist, encouraging strengthened and systematic cooperation between the United Nations and the World Bank based on their respective competencies, mandates and comparative advantage, in support of nationally owned strategies towards sustainable development.

“21. To increase the effectiveness of its own coordination and to enhance the impact of the work of all partners in the field, the United Nations should encourage:

(a) The more active involvement of bilateral donors in coordination at the field level, inter alia, by using the United Nations common country assessment as a way of promoting policy coherence and joining streamlined thematic groups;

(b) All other non-United Nations partners, including bilateral and multilateral, to make efforts to harmonize the implementation of their initiatives and/or development cooperation activities at the national and regional levels within the context of long-term and comprehensive plans and programmes.

“22. We welcome the decision taken by the Administrative Committee on Coordination to redirect United Nations system operational activities in Africa towards supporting African-led regional initiatives and to ensure a better integrated coordination of those activities with national development policies and programmes. To support and strengthen the leading role of African countries in coordinating assistance, the Secretary-General should:

(a) Ensure system-wide support for strengthening of local capacity and institutions to better mobilize and coordinate development assistance;

(b) Promote stronger inter-agency coordination at the headquarters, regional, subregional and national levels, while bringing on board other partners with regional and subregional programmes to work closely with the United Nations system, in particular the Economic Commission for Africa and OAU;

(c) Encourage Governments and their development partners to coordinate and harmonize their development activities based on national development strategies, inter alia, by utilizing sector-wide approaches;

(d) Ensure that United Nations policies and operational activities fit into a framework that integrates peace and development, as reaffirmed in section VII of the United Nations Millennium Declaration.

“Partnerships for development

“23. We believe that public-private partnerships can bring additional technical and financial resources to support African initiatives in health, education, science and technology development, and urge United Nations organizations to expand their partnerships with global civil society, including foundations, the private sector and NGOs. We also call for strengthened public-private partnerships to support these priority areas, as well as infrastructure, particularly transport, energy supply, and information and communications. With regard to the latter, we urge the United Nations Information and Communication Technologies Task Force and the Group of Eight Major Industrialized Countries

Digital Opportunity Task Force to support African initiatives geared towards narrowing the digital divide, including through mobilizing resources, as appropriate.

“24. We call for increased South-South and triangular cooperation, and in this regard note the critical importance of enhanced support for such cooperation to maximizing the benefits of such cooperation in providing African countries with technical assistance in such areas as information and communication technologies, education, professional training, health and capacity-building.

“25. We welcome the dialogue between the Group of Eight and representatives from Africa, including at the highest level, and invite the Group of Eight to maintain the dialogue to ensure that the challenges facing the region are given due attention on a regular basis.

“United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s

“26. We believe that the preparatory process for the final review and appraisal of the United Nations New Agenda for the Development of Africa in the 1990s, scheduled for September 2002, presents an opportunity for an assessment of the role the United Nations and the international community have played in supporting Africa’s priorities, including a comprehensive review of initiatives on Africa. In considering the final review, the General Assembly should take into account how best to improve the effectiveness of United Nations support for Africa’s priorities and initiatives, bearing in mind the Secretary-General’s 1998 report on the causes of conflict and the promotion of durable peace and sustainable development in Africa. We also request the Secretary-General to review the structures charged with follow up at the Secretariat level.”

Chapter V

Coordination segment

Coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system related to the following theme: the role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector

1. The Council held a discussion on the coordination of the policies and activities of the specialized agencies and other bodies of the United Nations system, on the theme “The role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector” (agenda item 4), at its 10th to 15th meetings, on 2 to 4 July 2001 (for the discussion, see E/2001/SR.10-15). It had before it the following documents:

(a) Letter dated 1 June 2001 from the Permanent Representative of Italy to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the findings and recommendations of the Third Global Forum: Fostering Democracy and Development through e-Government, held in Naples from 15 to 17 March 2001 (A/56/86-E/2001/79);

(b) Letter dated 20 July 2001 from the Permanent Representative of China to the United Nations addressed to the Secretary-General, transmitting the findings and recommendations of the International Symposium on Network Economy and Economic Governance, held in Beijing on 19 and 20 April 2001; the International Symposium on Government and e-Commerce Development, held in Ningbo, China, on 23 and 24 April 2001; and the Second High-level Forum on City Informatization in the Asia-Pacific Region, held in Shanghai from 24 to 26 May 2001 (A/56/211-E/2001/103);

(c) Report of the Secretary-General on the role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector (E/2001/59);

(d) Report of the Secretary-General on the implementation of the ministerial declaration of the high-level segment of the substantive session of 2000 of the Council (E/2001/91).

2. At its 10th meeting, on 2 July, the Council began its coordination segment.

3. At its 13th meeting, on 3 July, the Council held a panel discussion, on the theme “United Nations — private sector partnerships in promoting access to knowledge for development: potential, current status, the way forward”, which was attended by the following participants: the Acting Chief of the World Employment Report Team of the International Labour Organization, the Deputy Secretary-General of the International Telecommunication Union, the Director of the Information Society Division of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization and the Special Representative of the Director-General of the World Health Organization.

4. At its 14th meeting, on 4 July, the Council held a second panel discussion, on the theme “United Nations — private sector partnerships in meeting the challenges of development”, which was attended by the following participants: Jacques-François Martin, President of the Global Fund for Children’s Vaccines, the E-Volunteering Unit Coordinator of the United Nations Information Technology Service and Jean-Marie Blanchard, Business Development Manager for Market Development (Middle East, Africa and India) of Alcatel.

Action taken by the Council

5. Under agenda item 4, the Council adopted agreed conclusions 2001/1.

Agreed conclusions 2001/1

6. At the 15th meeting, on 4 July, the Vice-President of the Council, Francisco Seixas Da Costa (Portugal), introduced the draft agreed conclusions on the role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector (E/2001/L.16).

7. At the same meeting, the Council, having considered the reports under the item and based on informal consultations, adopted the draft agreed conclusions. The text read as follows:

“Agreed conclusions 2001/1

“1. The Council considered the theme ‘The role of the United Nations in promoting development, particularly with respect to access to and transfer of knowledge and technology, especially information and communication technologies, inter alia, through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector’ at its coordination segment. The Council noted that the General Assembly will consider, in appropriate intergovernmental consultations, ways and means to enhance cooperation between the United Nations and all relevant partners, in particular the private sector, during its fifty-sixth session, pursuant to General Assembly resolution 55/215 of 21 December 2000. In this context, the deliberations of the Council could be taken as an input to the forthcoming consultations of the General Assembly. The deliberations of the Council helped to further advance the work started by its ministerial declaration of 2000.¹ It examined the experience gained by the United Nations system in assisting Member States in harnessing the potential of knowledge and technology for promoting the development goals of the United Nations Millennium Declaration,² the international development targets as well as the outcomes of major United Nations conferences and summits. It identified ways to enhance the effectiveness of these activities, in particular through building partnership with the private sector and other stakeholders. In this context, the Council welcomed the potential and the importance of activities that are to be undertaken in the framework of the newly constituted Information and Communication Technologies Task Force.

“2. The need for technology transfer and better access to knowledge arises from the fact that, while knowledge and technological development are amongst the critical determinants of economic growth and sustainable development, there is considerable concentration of knowledge, and the technologies deriving from it, in a limited number of countries. The majority of the world population still lives in poverty and many have not yet reaped the full benefits of the information and communication technologies (ICT) revolution. This reality exposes many countries, especially in the developing world, to technological dependence, monopolistic pricing of technology and knowledge products and services, and, in some cases, to the application of inappropriate technological solutions to their unique set of problems.

“3. The transfer of technology should be suited to the particular needs of developing countries, and their development policies including for permanent, non-formal and distance education; training of educators; creation of local content; e-commerce; telemedicine; on-line administrative procedures; promotion of access to ICT; and creation of better work opportunities.

“4. At the same time, there is a considerable body of knowledge in the public domain from which developing countries do not adequately benefit owing to various reasons, including the problem of accessibility. A deliberate effort needs to be pursued in order to improve effective access to and transfer of this knowledge to developing countries.

“5. Technology is advancing at a very rapid pace. New advances in the fields of ICT, biotechnologies and material sciences, to mention a few, are further enhancing the already immense potential for dramatically advancing development through “leapfrogging” stages of technological development. However, the fact that this immense potential is not being adequately harnessed threatens to further marginalize the economies and peoples of the majority of developing countries. The urgent necessity to find effective and innovative ways to put this potential at the service of development for all should inform the work of the United Nations system in the area of transfer of technology and providing access to knowledge. Information and communication technologies need to be considered in the broader context of a developing country's overall priorities and socio-economic structure. They can also contribute to the empowerment of women and to reducing gender inequalities. In this regard, best practices and lessons learned by countries and communities that have already implemented ICT programmes need to be drawn from and built upon. Developed countries should share with developing and transition economy countries their experience in promoting and establishing ICT sectors in their own economies so that mistakes are avoided and benefits maximized.

“6. The Council welcomed the initiatives taken by the organizations of the United Nations system to strengthen the system's role in this regard and to build partnerships with other organizations doing work to promote development through access to and transfer of knowledge and technology. These initiatives have been concentrated in a number of areas, such as developing knowledge and technology transfer networks through the utilization of the new technologies, especially the Internet, providing technical assistance to developing countries, building the capacity of developing countries, and assisting them with the creation of a conducive policy environment for the absorption, adaptation and utilization of knowledge and technology.

“7. The Council recognized that due to developments in information and communication technology and the changing economics of information, knowledge is now more readily available in principle than ever before in the history of the human race. However, there are numerous constraints to accessing knowledge, particularly faced by developing countries and countries with economies in transition. These constraints, which prevent public and private sectors, as well as citizens, scientists and research institutions, from accessing knowledge, can and should be overcome. In this context, ways and means to provide and improve effective access to and transfer of knowledge and technology to developing countries need to be identified. The relevant policies and approaches must encompass addressing cost, technological and capacity constraints as well as the need for transparent legal and regulatory frameworks and international cooperation for transfer of knowledge and technology on concessional, preferential and favourable terms to the developing countries, as mutually agreed, taking into account the need to protect intellectual property rights and the special needs of developing countries. The United Nations role in this effort is pivotal, including through partnerships with relevant stakeholders, including the private sector and relevant international organizations, particularly in assisting developing countries in maximizing the benefits they can secure from ICT. In this context, the Council welcomes the forthcoming World Summit on the Information Society, which is to be organized in two phases, the first in Geneva in 2003 and the second in Tunis in 2005.

“8. International trade and foreign investment and international cooperation are among the main channels of knowledge and technology transfer to developing countries and countries with economies in transition. A new and emerging dimension to international trade is e-commerce and growth of integrated financial, production and supplier networks. Along with their potential to enhance developing country access to markets and finance, there is the obvious need to avoid these networks emerging as a new barrier to access for many developing countries because of lack of the necessary infrastructure to ensure connectivity as well as the required human and institutional capacity for effective participation in e-commerce and financial transactions.

“9. Sustainable development on a global basis requires, inter alia, accelerated transfer of knowledge and technology, especially ICT, in particular from developed to developing countries. In order to bridge the ‘digital divide’ and promote access to and effective use of ICT in developing countries, establishing transparent and consistent legal and regulatory frameworks and developing sound policies are also matters of significant importance. In order for the new possibilities to be realized by developing countries, there is an urgent need for action to overcome infrastructural bottlenecks in telecommunications, transport, logistics and customs operations. The Council calls upon the relevant organizations of the United Nations system to give high priority to providing assistance, including technical and financial, within existing mandates, to developing countries in their efforts to overcome these barriers and to establish a proper legal and regulatory framework that is transparent and consistent and which is a prerequisite in facilitating the expansion of the ICT market in developing countries. The United Nations system should also take into account the specific needs of countries with economies in transition in these areas.

“10. The Council welcomes the establishment of the ICT Task Force as a major recent practical step aimed at strengthening the United Nations system’s role in bridging the digital divide. Effective and meaningful collaborative efforts are required to enhance the developmental impact of ICT. Such efforts should include transfer of technology, in particular to developing countries, on concessional and preferential terms, as mutually agreed, especially technology related to knowledge-based sectors, the mobilization of resources from all sources, public and private, at the national and international levels, and promoting capacity-building. Under the ICT Task Force initiative, the United Nations will lend a truly global dimension to efforts to bridge the global digital divide, foster digital opportunity and thus firmly put ICT in the service of development for all. The stated objective of the Task Force is providing overall leadership to the United Nations role in helping to formulate strategies for the development of information and communication technologies and putting those technologies at the service of development and, on the basis of consultations with all stakeholders and Member States, forging a strategic partnership between the United Nations system, private industry and financing trusts and foundations, donors, programme countries and other relevant stakeholders. The Council stresses the need to ensure coherence and complementarity between the ICT Task Force and other ICT initiatives at the regional and global levels. The Council recognizes the importance of effective coordination within the United Nations system. The Council also stresses that the Task Force should build upon the expertise that already exists within the United Nations system, including the Commission on Science and Technology for Development and its work, and also requests the Secretary-General to bring the Commission on Science and Technology for Development into the system-wide coordination regarding information and communication technologies. The Council calls upon Member States, the organizations of the United Nations system within their mandates and other stakeholders to extend their full support to the Task Force, including through financial resources on the basis of voluntary contributions.

“11. The Council notes that the establishment of the ICT Task Force resulted from the acknowledgement of the existence of a widening digital divide and the recognition of the need to narrow the gap between developed and developing countries. In order to overcome this gap, effective and meaningful collaborative efforts are required, involving Governments, multilateral institutions, the donor community, the private sector, civil society and other relevant stakeholders to enhance the developmental impact of ICT.

“12. The Council acknowledges that the private sector in the area of ICT plays an important role in and is an essential source of technological innovation that generates economic growth, employment and wealth creation. The private sector has the financial and technological wherewithal to make a positive contribution to ICT for development, inter alia, within the context of genuine partnerships. Market forces alone will not suffice to put ICT at the service of development.

“13. The Council calls for the strengthening of the United Nations system’s crucial catalytic role in promoting transfer of technology and access to knowledge to developing countries and countries with economies in transition. Building partnerships with other stakeholders, including the private sector, is one of the effective means in strengthening that role. To that end, the United Nations system is encouraged to continue and further their efforts to:

(a) Support national and regional efforts in integrating national programmes for putting ICT in the service of development into national and/or regional development strategies, as defined and implemented on the basis of national priorities and on the principle of national ownership of such strategies;

(b) Support national efforts for technological development, targeted towards strengthening national science and technology research and development capacities and to improving the absorptive capacity for technology transfer, integration and diffusion, through appropriately structured international assistance;

(c) Improve coordination, complementarity and mutual links among knowledge networks developed by individual organizations of the United Nations system, including its regional organizations;

(d) Support the recently established ICT Task Force as a framework and an approach within which the identification, assessment, transfer, adaptation and post-transfer follow-up of knowledge and ICT, can take place while ensuring coherence and complementarity between the ICT Task Force and other ICT initiatives;

(e) Ensure that the principles and approaches that govern these partnerships and arrangements should build on the firm foundation of the United Nations development goals. Without imposing any rigidity in partnership agreements, agencies of the United Nations should continue to adhere to a common principled approach to partnership which includes the following principles: common purpose, transparency, bestowing no unfair advantages upon any entity which is in partnership with the United Nations, and not compromising the independence and neutrality of the United Nations system in general and the agency in particular;

(f) Assist, upon request, Governments of developing countries in establishing legal and institutional frameworks that will facilitate the successful acquisition, adaptation and utilization of technology, especially ICT;

(g) Strengthen programmes and projects for education, institutional capacity-building and human resources development for ICT through collaborative and joint programming and promoting partnerships among academic and research institutions of developing and developed countries, as well as countries with economies in transition;

(h) Support national efforts to establish the necessary human and physical infrastructure for ICT;

(i) Assist developing countries and regional institutions of developing countries in building local, national and regional networks of partnerships suited to the demands of their particular circumstances and needs;

(j) Encourage partnership arrangements among chambers of commerce and other business and industry organizations in developed and developing countries in order to assist in spreading best practices, including training in technical skills and know-how, management practices and the use of new management tools, and institutional cooperation;

(k) Encourage the private sector towards accepting and implementing the principle of good corporate citizenship, that is, bringing social values and responsibilities to bear on a conduct and policy premised on profit incentives, in conformity with national laws and regulations;

(l) In cooperation with other partners, design special programmes for the least developed countries and Africa that will enhance their capacity to benefit from knowledge and technology transfer;

(m) Provide assistance to civil society institutions of developing countries, especially their small and medium-sized enterprises and non-governmental organizations, in order to enable them to participate fully in partnerships with the United Nations system and partners from the industrialized countries;

(n) Develop mechanisms and tools to monitor, measure and evaluate the effectiveness of knowledge and technology transfer partnerships in terms of their performance, especially in relation to achieving specific socio-economic goals and targets as defined by the partners."

Chapter VI

Humanitarian affairs segment

Special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance

1. The Council considered the question of special economic, humanitarian and disaster relief assistance (agenda item 5) at its 22nd to 26th meetings, from 11 to 13 July 2001 (for the proceeding see E/2001/SR.22-26). It had before it the report of the Secretary-General on strengthening the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations (A/56/95-E/2001/85).

2. At its 24th meeting, on 11 July, the Council held a panel discussion on natural disaster preparedness and response measures in which the following panellists participated: the Executive Director of the World Food Programme (WFP) and Special Envoy of the Secretary-General on the Drought in the Greater Horn of Africa, Christopher Lamb, International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies, and the United Nations resident coordinators in El Salvador and Mongolia.

3. At its 25th meeting, on 11 July, the Council held a panel discussion on emergency humanitarian assistance for groups with special needs in which the following panellists participated: the Executive Director of the United Nations Children's Fund, the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees, Jean-Daniel Tauxe of the International Committee of the Red Cross and the United Nations resident/humanitarian coordinator in Afghanistan.

Document considered by the Council in connection with item 5

4. At its 26th meeting, on 13 July, on the proposal of the President, the Council took note of the document submitted under item 5. See Council decision 2001/228.

Summary of the Vice-President

5. At its 26th meeting, on 13 July 2001, the Vice-President of the Council, Mikhail Wehbe (Syrian Arab Republic), introduced the summary of the Vice-President.

6. At the same meeting, the Council decided to include the summary in the report of the Council. The text read as follows:

“Vice-President’s summary

“1. I had the great pleasure and honour to be in charge of the preparation of the humanitarian affairs segment of the substantive session of 2001 of the Council, the fourth such segment. I would like to express my highest consideration to the President of the Council, Martin Belinga-Eboutou, as well as to other members of the Council, whose sincere commitment and strong spirit of cooperation played an important role in making this humanitarian affairs segment successful. I am also highly appreciative of the cooperation I received from the Presidents of the main groups and their members, who also contributed to the success of this segment. I would also like to thank the United Nations Secretariat, particularly its Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, and I am grateful to the Emergency Relief Coordinator for his active participation, and to the organizations of the United Nations system for their support and active participation.

“2. The humanitarian affairs segment was guided by the decision that I submitted to the Council on the basis of informal consultations held pursuant to Council decision 2001/206, which outlined the working arrangements for the segment.

“I. Overview of the report

“3. The segment began with the presentation of the Secretary-General’s report (A/56/95-E/2001/85). On the tenth anniversary of the adoption of General Assembly resolution 46/182, the report provides an overview of the changes in the humanitarian environment over the last decade and the consequent developments and challenges. It looks specifically at the key crises, both natural disasters and complex emergencies, which occurred during the last year, along with the United Nations response to them.

“4. The report highlights both the progress made and the constraints involved in strengthening the coordination of humanitarian assistance. It reviews the tools and mechanisms established under General Assembly resolution 46/182 — the Emergency Relief Coordinator, the Central Emergency Revolving Fund, the Consolidated Appeals Process and the Inter-Agency Standing Committee. The report places particular emphasis on the coordination and response roles of regional, national and local actors and on building partnerships with Governments and local communities. It emphasizes the importance of strengthening coordination with non-governmental organizations in response to disasters and emergencies and the potential for engaging the private sector in support of humanitarian assistance. The report highlights the importance of strengthening coordination among the humanitarian assistance, political, peacekeeping, human rights and development aspects of the United Nations in response to emergencies. The report outlines the key role of information management in responding to a crisis and in the important areas of early warning, prevention and preparedness.

“5. The report details some of the key challenges to providing humanitarian assistance, particularly access, safety and security of staff, the existence of ‘war economies’, developments in considering sanctions regimes and the need to develop greater linkages between relief and rehabilitation and development. It concludes with a reference to the need for greater financial support and makes specific recommendations for support by Member States.

“II. Summary of the general debate

“6. The Council noted with appreciation the report of the Secretary-General, and welcomed it as a useful and comprehensive framework for its discussions. Delegations noted that 2001 marks the tenth anniversary of the adoption of General Assembly resolution 46/182, which is considered a landmark in the international community’s efforts to improve the effectiveness of humanitarian assistance in response to both natural disasters and complex emergencies. Member States reaffirmed the importance of the guiding principles and the instruments and the mechanisms established under this resolution. In spite of the changes to the humanitarian environment over the last decade, the resolution continues to be an extremely important framework for humanitarian action.

“7. Many of the delegations referred to the importance of the Council in providing guidance to the United Nations on the coordination of humanitarian assistance and maintaining separate segments. Many delegations expressed the view that they would have preferred to see agreed conclusions in 2001 and stressed that this should not set a precedent and stated that they looked forward to formulating agreed conclusions in 2002.

“8. Delegations warmly welcomed Mr. Kenzo Oshima in assuming the post of Emergency Relief Coordinator and expressed strong support for that function. Many also encouraged the Emergency Relief Coordinator to engage actively in negotiating access to vulnerable populations.

“9. Delegations expressed support for the work of the Inter-Agency Standing Committee (IASC), while requesting that IASC be more open and transparent in its proceedings. In particular, several delegations called for regular informal briefings by IASC, on the issues it is addressing throughout the year. Some delegations specifically welcomed the partnership between the United Nations, the Red Cross movement and other organizations represented by IASC, and proposed that it be further expanded to incorporate more humanitarian non-governmental organizations.

“10. Grave concerns were expressed about the serious lack of funding for United Nations humanitarian activities. All delegations agreed that more support should be given to the Consolidated Appeals Process. Some delegations expressed that the process should be more inclusive and involve all humanitarian actors. Many delegations noted with concern the uneven level of funding between crises in different geographic locations, with some pointing out the corollary between lack of funding and lack of attention or media interest on the world scene. Some delegations also referred to the imbalance in funding among sectors and pointed out the impact of the decline in multilateral funding, including the limits it places on programme delivery and coordination. Many delegations, while noting that funding through bilateral and other means had increased, stated that multilateral funding should not diminish. Most delegations acknowledged that there have been important improvements to the preparation and presentation of the Consolidated Appeals Process but stressed that more is required, particularly in the areas of strategic planning, prioritization and monitoring. There was also significant emphasis on incorporating the long-term perspective into planning for and responding to humanitarian emergencies. The importance of sustaining humanitarian gains by having mechanisms for funding the smooth transition from relief to development was repeatedly stressed. In a similar vein, while urging increased support for emergency humanitarian assistance, several delegations emphasized that this should not be at the expense of or drawn from development funds.

“11. The value of the mechanism of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund was also acknowledged, although some delegations noted that it is underutilized and its importance could be enhanced. In this regard, many delegations urged that positive consideration be given to the Secretary-General’s recommendations that the use of the Central Emergency Revolving Fund be expanded to include assistance for natural disasters, protracted emergencies and for staff security.

“12. Delegations made general comments about strengthening coordination mechanisms in the field and acknowledged the importance of bringing together different agencies and operational partners in the field. Some delegations noted the central role played by resident and humanitarian coordinators, commenting that these positions can be combined if suitably skilled persons are identified. Many delegations stressed the importance of timely appointments of humanitarian coordinators on the basis of clearly defined procedures, drawing on a pool of competent candidates. Some highlighted the need to replace resident coordinators if situations change and different skills are required. Other delegations commented that other models should be considered in the appropriate circumstances, such as the lead agency model.

“13. In terms of humanitarian crises themselves, almost all delegations were gravely preoccupied with the increase in number and impact of natural disasters. There was general consensus that natural disasters need to be given a higher priority in the light of the increasing vulnerability of populations to natural hazards, particularly those prone to disaster. It was frequently noted that the impact of natural disasters does not need to be so enormous since, with contingency planning, early warning, preparedness and rapid response, much damage can be mitigated. Several delegations underlined the link between poverty and lack of development and the overwhelming damage caused by the majority of today’s disasters. It was repeatedly stressed that development is the real solution to mitigating the effects of disasters but that much more could be done before, during and after the emergency phase.

“14. In this regard, delegations were unanimous in the need to strengthen the capacity to prepare for and respond to disasters, particularly at the regional, national and local levels. A few examples were given where speedy response on a regional or national basis helped save lives and reduce the number of those affected or the severity of the impact. Several delegations welcomed the assistance provided by United Nations disaster assessment and coordination (UNDAC) teams and regional disaster response advisers and supported the expansion of these two mechanisms, based on recent lessons earned. In particular, the establishment of a regional UNDAC team for the Caribbean and the posting of regional disaster response advisers to Central America and Southern Africa were welcomed.

“15. There was also repeated reference to the development of standards for emergency humanitarian response, particularly for search and rescue operations. Many delegations commented on the ongoing discussions among Member States aimed at the development of a legal framework for international urban search and rescue operations. Many supported this process, which is being facilitated by the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, and recommended continuing efforts in this regard. A number of delegations specifically requested the Secretary-General to provide a more detailed report to the General Assembly on the progress of these discussions. Others stated that they were watching developments with great interest. One delegation, while agreeing with the idea of common standards, did not agree that these should form part of a binding legal framework. However, almost all delegations expressed appreciation for the work of the International Search and Rescue Advisory Group.

“16. While complimenting the United Nations on the assistance that it has provided and the efforts to improve coordination that it has made to date, delegations were unanimous in referring to the key challenges that still remain. In particular, all delegations reiterated the importance of gaining access to vulnerable populations to provide humanitarian assistance, with many noting that this must be done in the context of the principles of neutrality, impartiality and humanity. All delegations confirmed that the primary responsibility for assisting and protecting people on their territory lies with the State concerned, which should abide by national legislation and international humanitarian law in fulfilling this responsibility. Many delegations stated that humanitarian assistance should be provided at the request or with the consent of the State concerned. However, one delegation noted that when there are systematic violations of human rights and international humanitarian law, the principle of non-intervention must be complemented by one of ‘non-indifference’. Many delegations emphasized that the effective delivery of humanitarian assistance, including gaining access to vulnerable populations, demands the political will of Member States.

“17. There was consensus on the fact that the plight of internally displaced persons represents one of the major humanitarian issues and that the scale of this problem is increasing. A few delegations noted that the numbers of internally displaced are almost double those of refugees. On the question of internally displaced persons, all delegations recognized and emphasized that the primary responsibility rests with the State concerned, but it was also noted that many internal displacement crises call for the assistance of the international humanitarian community. There was broad recognition and support of the role of the Emergency Relief Coordinator in coordinating efforts in this area. Many delegations expressed support for the establishment of a small non-operational unit within the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs, as endorsed by the Secretary-General and noted in his report, to work closely with the responsible operational agencies. Some delegations noted that the unit should also complement the work of the Secretary-General’s Representative on Internally Displaced Persons.

“18. Some delegations welcomed the engagement of the Security Council in considering humanitarian issues, such as the protection of civilians in armed conflict, the effect of conflict on women and children and the prevalence of HIV/AIDS in conflict. However, others cautioned that the distinction between humanitarian and peacekeeping activities should nonetheless remain clear and that the humanitarian agenda should not be subsumed by other issues.

“19. All delegations welcomed the attention being paid to emergency assistance to groups with special needs. Many delegations emphasized that these groups should not just be seen as vulnerable but also in terms of their potential to contribute to the effective and targeted delivery of humanitarian assistance and other recovery processes. In particular, delegations expressed strong support for the gender dimension of humanitarian assistance and incorporating the gender perspective into all activities. They highlighted the importance of the role of women in contributing to the promotion of peace, security and human rights and asked that more support be given to women’s groups engaged in these activities.

“20. All delegations noted that children are the main victims of all emergencies. There was particular concern expressed about children in conflict, including with respect to the increasing numbers of child soldiers and sexual violence against girls. Many delegations requested that the child perspective be taken into account in designing and implementing assistance programmes. Some Member States urged the ratification of the Optional Protocols¹ to the Convention on the Rights of the Child.²

“21. Some delegations expressed their concern about the humanitarian situation for the Arab peoples in the occupied territories and stressed the importance of strict adherence to the provisions of international humanitarian law and the Geneva Conventions in addressing the needs of the affected populations.

“22. Last but by no means least, all delegations attached enormous importance to the safety and security of humanitarian staff. Indeed, some commented that the issue should have been given much greater prominence. Real concern was expressed over the unacceptable loss of so many lives in the course of humanitarian activities and the absolute imperative that this be resolutely addressed. Many delegations referred to the moral responsibility of the United Nations to ensure the protection and security of humanitarian personnel, and noted that the necessary measures to achieve this, such as security coordination, training and better communications should be funded on an adequate and sustainable basis. Many wished to see the 1994 Convention on the Safety of United Nations and Associated Personnel³ extended to all staff engaged in humanitarian operations and expressed their commitment to bringing this about. Some delegations also mentioned the responsibility of Member States to protect humanitarian staff working on their territory and to apprehend and punish those who attack them.

“III. Summary of the panel discussions

“1. Natural disaster preparedness and response measures

“23. The panel was moderated by the Executive Head of WFP, who also presented a case study on the situation during the drought in the Horn of Africa, in her capacity as the Secretary-General’s Special Envoy to the region. In her presentation, she outlined the huge impact of the drought, noting its cyclical nature and the millions of people affected. She highlighted the importance of gaining access to the affected populations and working with government counterparts in all aspects of the relief operation, from needs assessment to logistics and the delivering and targeting of assistance. She commented that while the famine was averted, the region, even with the arrival of rains, is still in crisis and requires further support to allow the affected populations to recover and rebuild. The Head of the Humanitarian Advocacy Department of the International Federation of Red Cross and Red Crescent Societies (IFRC) then discussed the rising number and scale of natural disasters in the last decade. He spoke of the need to move away from the treatment of disaster response and disaster preparedness as separate issues and to reassess the way that people are assisted so that developmental gains are not swept away. He also referred to the unique position of IFRC in acting as a bridge between intergovernmental organizations and civil society, through the national Red Cross Societies.

“24. The United Nations resident coordinators for El Salvador and Mongolia then gave presentations on the recent disasters in those countries and the activities undertaken by the Government, the United Nations and other humanitarian partners to address them. With respect to El Salvador, the resident coordinator focused on lessons learned from previous disasters in the region and the importance of strengthening capacities, particularly with respect to contingency planning and preparedness. He also stressed the importance of development and mitigation and the role of information. The resident coordinator for Mongolia commented on the difficulties of dealing with slow-evolving disasters and also stressed the importance of development and long-range planning for ensuring people’s livelihoods and reducing their vulnerability to disaster.

“25. The delegations expressed their appreciation of the quality of the presentations by the panellists, and underlined the value of the panels as a means for exchanging ideas and suggestions on key issues of the international response to natural disasters. Many of the issues discussed echoed those raised during the general session.

“26. There was consensus on the need for rapid and appropriate response to disasters and having sufficient means to meet priority requirements. The usefulness of the UNDAC teams and IFRC rapid intervention teams were noted. The delegations were unanimous on the need for strengthening response and mitigation capacities at the local, national and regional levels, for which it was felt that the United Nations had a special responsibility. Mitigating and preventive measures to reduce both vulnerability and disaster impact were seen as the future challenge for the international community. Panellists also pointed to the importance of rural development as a preventive measure against future disasters, such as in Mongolia.

“27. The importance of lessons learned was voiced by many delegations, particularly with respect to disaster mitigation and the role of technology in early warning and needs assessment. One delegation recommended that a focal point be designated as the repository for the collective wisdom of international experience in responding to disasters. The need to examine the root causes of disasters was also highlighted.

“28. Several panellists indicated that following recent disasters in their countries, initiatives had been taken towards more consolidated response activities with the Government and other national and international players. Delegations stressed the importance of creating partnership with the beneficiaries, particularly at the local level. The engagement of women in this process was emphasized, especially as they usually bear the brunt of the impact of disaster. The delegations were also unanimous on the need for coordination and communication at the national and international levels, i.e., between Governments, the United Nations, non-governmental organizations and the private sector, when relevant. Some delegations felt that the overall response of the United Nations system could benefit from greater coherence and comprehensiveness as well as strategic focus. The importance of including the long-term perspective in relief assistance was highlighted, notably strengthening the development and mitigation aspects. It was mentioned that people often lose their livelihoods in natural disasters and need support to regain it. It was noted that not just reconstruction but transformation is important, i.e., that reconstruction should not rebuild the previous weaknesses back into the system but address and mitigate them.

“2. Emergency assistance to groups with special needs

“29. The panel was moderated by the Executive Director of the United Nations Children’s Fund, who also gave a brief presentation on the theme. Referring to the four core coordination mechanisms established under General Assembly resolution 46/182, she underlined the critical role of IASC in bringing together all key humanitarian actors for strategic policy dialogue and for discussing operational issues. She referred to IASC’s work in focusing on gender analysis as a basis for appropriate humanitarian action. She noted the changing nature and magnitude of conflicts and underscored the need to link political solutions to humanitarian solutions. She commended the increasing role of the Security Council in advocating for children and other vulnerable groups, and pointed out the landmark resolutions adopted on issues of children in armed conflict, protection of civilians, and women and peace and security.

“30. She noted that the safety and security of staff continued to be a priority concern of humanitarian agencies: since 1992, more than 300 United Nations staff have been killed. She pointed out the need to strengthen coordination between humanitarian assistance and mine action and mine awareness programmes, especially in post-conflict situations. She referred to the forthcoming special session of the General Assembly on Children, in follow-up to the 1990 World Summit for Children and Graca Machel’s report on the impact of armed conflict on children (see A/51/306, annex). Finally, she welcomed the increased attention on education in humanitarian programmes.

“31. The representative of the United Nations High Commissioner for Refugees then gave an overview of the situation in West Africa, highlighting the many challenges, in terms of access, security and political constraints, faced by humanitarian agencies in addressing the needs of vulnerable populations, including refugees and internally displaced persons. The Director of Operations for the International Committee of the Red Cross (ICRC) referred to the situation in West Africa and in Afghanistan, also highlighting a number of challenges to humanitarian assistance, including the lack of access, the lack of security for humanitarian actors, and the regional dimensions to the conflicts. He also provided an overview of ICRC multisectoral programmes in both areas, underlining the activities undertaken in favour of groups with special needs, particularly women and children.

“32. The resident/humanitarian coordinator for Afghanistan then provided an overview of the humanitarian situation in Afghanistan, where the internalization of the conflict since 1992 and the recent spread of fighting have been exacerbated by the last three years of drought. Noting that traditional coping mechanisms have broken down and that over three million people are relying on food assistance, he stressed the need to assist the vulnerable in situ so as to stabilize the situation and pre-empt further displacement. He also underscored the need to look beyond emergency needs to longer-term assistance.

“33. Various delegations expressed their appreciation for the efforts of humanitarian agencies to address the needs of vulnerable populations, including groups with special needs, particularly in Afghanistan and West Africa. Some delegations also commended the coordination efforts of the Office for the Coordination of Humanitarian Affairs and encouraged it to establish regional coordination mechanisms.

“34. The need to build partnerships with regional and local actors was stressed by most delegations. Some also underscored the need to include beneficiaries, particularly women and children, in the programming of humanitarian assistance. Several panellists noted the critical role of civil society and local non-governmental organizations in addressing the needs of the vulnerable and provided examples of concrete cooperation with regional actors, such as the Organization for African Unity and the Economic Community of West African States.

“35. Responding to questions on what agencies were doing in favour of groups with special needs, one panellist noted that lack of funds often forced cuts in activities on behalf of groups with special needs. He noted that statements on what had to be done needed to be matched by commitments.

“36. The problem of access was repeatedly raised, and some noted the need to find some common ground and understanding when negotiating for access with non-state actors. The need to ensure the safety and security of staff, including through adequate resources being provided to the security apparatus on the ground, was also noted. References were also made to the need for mine action and disarmament, demobilization and reintegration programmes.

“IV. Areas of broad consensus and support

“37. Members of the Council reaffirmed the value and significance of the guiding principles laid down in General Assembly resolution 46/182, and supported the strengthening of the tools and mechanisms established therein.

“38. Members of the Council highlighted the need to increase national and regional capacities for preparing for and responding to natural disasters, particularly in the areas of early warning systems, contingency planning, response mechanisms and disaster reduction and mitigation. The Council welcomed the support already provided by the United Nations system in this regard, and called for greater collaboration and partnership with regional, national and local actors. The Council noted that information-sharing would be a key element in this process.

“39. Members of the Council placed a strong emphasis on the primary responsibility of the State concerned to protect and assist civilian populations, particularly the vulnerable and displaced. They also agreed that Governments, as well as parties to conflict, must facilitate the access of humanitarian workers to those in need. The Council also attached the highest importance to strengthening measures to enhance the security of humanitarian personnel engaged in the provision of assistance. The Council noted the importance of viewing groups with special needs in terms of not just their vulnerability but also their potential to contribute to relief, recovery and development, and commented on the need to incorporate the perspective of such groups into programme planning and implementation.

“40. Members of the Council noted with appreciation the activities of the United Nations system in the field of humanitarian assistance, not only over the last year but during the last decade. The Council looks forward to continuing to be informed by the Secretary-General on further progress made in the strengthening of the coordination of emergency humanitarian assistance of the United Nations system.”

“Recalling further that the life and health of individuals are inevitably related to developments in life sciences and social areas, “Bearing in mind that humanity should participate in the evaluation of the implications of the genetic revolution and guide its applications in an open, ethical and participatory manner,

“Reaffirming that the information obtained from genetic tests, which is personal, should be held confidential based on the conditions set by law, “Recognizing that genetic data associated with an identifiable person can in some instances be specific to other members of the individual’s family or community, and that the rights and interests of such persons must also be taken into account in the handling of such data,

“Stressing the fact that revealing genetic information belonging to individuals without their consent may cause harm and discrimination against them in such areas as employment, education, social and medical insurance,

“Recalling that in order to protect human rights and fundamental freedoms the limitations to the principles of consent and confidentiality may only be prescribed by law, for compelling reasons within the bounds of public international law and the international law of human rights,

“1. Urges States to ensure that no one shall be subjected to discrimination based on genetic characteristics;

“2. Also urges States to protect the privacy of those subject to genetic testing and to ensure that genetic testing is done with the prior, free, informed and express consent of the individual or authorization obtained in the manner prescribed by law and in accordance with public international law and the international law of human rights;

“3. Invites States to take appropriate specific measures, including through legislation, to prevent the use of genetic information and testing leading to discrimination or exclusion against individuals or members of their families or communities, in all areas, particularly in social, medical or employment-related areas, whether in the public or the private sector;

“4. Calls upon States to promote, as appropriate, the development and implementation of standards providing greater protection with regard to the collection, storage, disclosure and use of genetic information taken from genetic tests that might lead to discrimination or invasion of privacy;

“5. Urges States to continue to support research in the area of human genetics and biotechnology, subject to accepted scientific and ethical standards and to the potential benefit of all, especially the poor, emphasizing that such research and its applications should fully respect human dignity, freedom and human rights, as well as the prohibition of all forms of discrimination based on genetic characteristics;
