“Also reaffirming that global financial flows, in the context of financial globalization, have presented Governments, the multilateral financial institutions and the international community at large with new challenges and opportunities, and that they should constitute a very important element of the dialogue between the United Nations system and the Bretton Woods institutions,

“Mindful of the vital role of financing for developing and fostering the economic development of the developing countries, and emphasizing the importance of adequate financial resources for development,

“Recognizing the benefits of the increasing integration of global markets and the important role of financial capital flows for promoting economic development and social welfare,

“Deeply concerned over the continuing decline of official development assistance, which is a major external source for financing development and is a crucial input for infrastructure development in developing countries, especially where private capital flows may either be inadequate or not available,

“Regretting that the financial markets have exhibited extreme volatility, which has resulted in higher interest rate spreads and a sharp decline in private capital flows to developing countries, leading to a significant slowdown in economic activity,

“Deeply concerned that the international financial crisis has acquired extremely worrying dimensions, posing a severe threat to world economic development,

“Expressing concern that the financial crisis has seriously affected the growth and development prospects of least developed countries,

“Also expressing concern over the negative effects of the financial crisis on the international trading system, in particular the sharp reduction of commodity prices and its negative effects on the development prospect of developing countries,

“3. Emphasizes that the international financial institutions, in providing policy advice and prescriptions in the context of adjustments and financial crisis programme, should ensure that they are sensitive to specific needs and circumstances of developing countries and ensure the best possible outcome for the economies concerned;

“4. Also recognizes the importance of safeguarding the growth and development prospects of least developed countries, which remain the poorest and most vulnerable segment of the international community, and calls upon development partners to adopt immediate measures, in particular for substantial increase in official development assistance, large-scale debt relief, improved market access and enhanced balance-of-payments support;

“5. Stresses the need for constructive dialogue among developed and developing countries with regard to the repeated appeals for improving the international financial system;

“6. Also stresses the importance of the open high-level dialogue between the Economic and Social Council and the Bretton Woods institutions, and invites the Secretary-General to consider the possibility of convening the high-level dialogue in 1999 immediately before the spring meeting between the World Bank and the International Monetary Fund;

“13. Calls on the international community to pursue national and international efforts, at the intergovernmental and inter-agency levels, to contribute to minimizing the excessive volatility of global financial flows, and to distribute in a more equitable manner the costs of systemic adjustments between the public and private sectors;

“14. Invites the International Monetary Fund to facilitate the dialogue among relevant actors to consider the possibility of establishing a regulatory framework for short-term capital flows and trade in currencies;

“15. Recognizes that a most important question that needs to be addressed by the international community in the wake of globalization is the need to mobilize resources for such goals as poverty eradication, human resources development and health and education;
